

slick + design

941 west randolph street
chicago.illinois 60607
info@slickdesign.com
dial_1.312.563.9000

CARNEVOR

Man. Homo sapiens. The paragon of animals. Top of the food chain. Let's face it – God didn't give us canines for garbanzo beans. Beneath those silk suits and crisply knotted ties and all the accoutrements of ten thousand years of civilization, we're still predators thirsting for the hunt, ravenous for adventure, lusting for the risk and the reward. Throw double sevens or lay down that royal flush, the stomach still bellows for its filling.

"Flesh," Geena Davis once said to Jeff Goldblum, while cutting up a steak, "It drives you crazy."

Slick Design & Manufacturing believes the way of all flesh is toward the grill, and presents Carnevora, the ultimate reinvention of the steakhouse, as a neo-medieval feasting hall for those who relish the challenge of exotic meats. On the menu will be a veritable international bestiary of grillables embracing the wildfire trend, noted by the press in New York City, Boston, Denver, and Seattle, for daring alternatives to the traditional Porterhouse. Proposed dishes run the gamut from alligator to zebra (far more popular than beef in Nairobi), and may include anything inbetween – buffalo, giraffe, elk, lion, musk ox, rattlesnake and cobra, to name a few.

Patrons who push open the massive Gothic doors, gouged by raptor claws, are devoured by a space minimal in its expanse, modern in its aesthetic, muscular with massive rectilinear lines, and unashamedly masculine in its demeanor. Warm amber lighting illuminates a medley of wood tones by turn rich, warm, dark and exotic. The lighting is specifically placed to glint off gilded accents and touches of gold gloss vinyl, providing the space with a shadowy atmosphere that is darkly romantic and erotically tribal. A small bar allows patrons space for a pre-dinner martini, while the basement level, outfitted with dark rustic wood and iron dungeon-like accents, fits two pool tables with perimeter seating for those who wish to duel by cue.

Carnevora – a sophisticated and sexy venue of dining and leisure for adventurous palates, and diners who prefer a rare dish well done.